SCHMIDT, GUIDO

Former Austrian Minister for Foreign Affairs; now member of board of Hermann Goeringswerke; born in small town of Dornbirn in Vorarlberg; son of well-to-do merchant; had several brothers, one of whom was general manager of Suchard Chocolate Factory; attended 'Stella Matutina', Jesuit College in Feldkirch, where his long friendship with SCHUSCHNIGG (q.v.) began; attended Universities of Innsbruck and Vienna; perfected his French at Sorbonne; also mastered English and Italian; while in Paris, worked for late Chancellor Seipel, who got him a job in the chancellery; when Dollfuss became Prime Minister, Schmidt renewed his friendship with Schuschnigg and grew to exert strong influence on him; hard worker, affable, egotistical realist; always believed in independence of Austria and loose affiliation with Germany; in 1936, under pressure from von PAPPEN (q.v., (TURKEY)) and Mussolini, Austria and Germany concluded an agreement which included placing two 'Grossdeutsche' in cabinet: HORST-GLEISENAU (q.v.) as Secretary of State without portfolio, and Schmidt as Secretary of State in Foreign Office; Schuschnigg remained as Minister of Foreign Affairs and Prime Minister; when in London at George VI's coronation, met and liked Anthony EDEN (GREAT BRITAIN) (both are social and well-dressed); was encouraged by him to foster peaceful policy for Middle-Europe, and to cede somewhat to German demands; he and Schuschnigg agreed to new policy: that Austria was not a European but an inner-German problem; however, to improve Austria's position, they tried to increase her influence in Poland; Nazis quashed this through von MOLTKE and GÖRNING (qq.v.) who started a fake Habsburg restoration scare; he became intimate with GÖRNING at this time, and they went hunting together; he felt this intimacy would be a safeguard to Austria, but it was not, and after Schuschnigg's visit to Berchtesgaden in February 1938, he gave up and played completely into Nazis' hands.
